

Deborah L. Wince-Smith

President & CEO of the Council on Competitiveness

Deborah L. Wince-Smith is the President and CEO of the Council on Competitiveness, a national coalition of CEOs, university presidents, labor leaders, and national lab directors dedicated to advancing U.S. economic competitiveness. With over 20 years of senior U.S. government experience, she was the first Senate-confirmed Assistant Secretary for Technology Policy at the U.S. Department of Commerce and served as Assistant Director for International Affairs in the Reagan White House.

A globally recognized expert in innovation policy, competitiveness strategy, and public-private partnerships, Ms. Wince-Smith serves on numerous national and international advisory boards. Her past and current affiliations include the University of California National Labs Council, Argonne National Laboratory, Smithsonian National Board, Lehigh University, NASDAQ-OMX, UNICEF, and various advisory roles with the U.S. State Department, Commerce Department, and World Economic Forum.

She currently serves as a Commissioner on the Council's National Commission on Innovation and Competitiveness Frontiers, is involved with the Japan Science and Technology Agency, the Delphi Economic Forum, and advisory boards of several universities and private tech companies in fields such as medical lasers, cybersecurity, and biotherapeutics.

She holds degrees from Vassar College and King's College, Cambridge, and has received multiple honorary doctorates in recognition of her contributions to public service, innovation, and global economic leadership.
