

Dr. Hippolyte Fofack

Research Associate, Harvard University, Cameroon

Dr. Hippolyte Fofack is a leading economist with over 20 years of experience in leadership and management, development economics, banking, international finance, and academia.

He serves as SDSN's Parker Fellow, working closely with the SDSN's Leadership to advance the SDSN's work in Africa on a myriad of critical issues, including African monetary reform and development, international finance, and higher education.

Dr. Fofack has served in several capacities, including most recently as Chief Economist and Director of Research and International Cooperation at the African Export-Import Bank (Afreximbank), where he made significant contributions to the African Continental Free Trade Agreement (AfCFTA). Before joining Afreximbank, Dr. Fofack worked at the World Bank Group in several capacities, including as an economist for the Great Lakes countries in Africa and as Head of the Macroeconomics and Growth Program.

Dr. Fofack's additional achievements include contributing to the development of the Integrated Macroeconomic Model for Poverty Analysis (IMMPA), a quantitative dynamic framework for analyzing the impact of policy and exogenous shocks on income distribution, employment, and poverty in low-and-middle-income countries; leading the conception and design of the Nelson Mandela Institution for Knowledge Building and the Advancement of Science and Technology in Africa; serving as a fellow of the African Academy of Sciences (AAS) and a Distinguished Fellow of the Global Federation of Competitiveness Councils (GFCC), among others.

He has taught and lectured at several universities and research institutions, including most recently at Harvard University, where he delivered the inaugural "Africa Lecture" organized by Harvard Kennedy School's Africa Policy Journal and Harvard's Africa Center and Business and Government.

Dr. Fofack holds a master's degree in economics from the University of Lille, an advanced degree (DEA) in international economics and finance from the University of Bordeaux, and a Ph.D. from American University in Washington, DC.
