

James Rogers

Co-founder and Director of Research – Council on Geostrategy

Areas of expertise: Britain's global posture, strategic advantage, sea power, Euro-Atlantic and Indo-Pacific geopolitics

James Rogers is the Co-founder and Director of Research at the Council on Geostrategy, where he focuses on geopolitics and British strategic policy. He has led pioneering work on Euro-Atlantic and Indo-Pacific connectivity and strategic advantage.

Previously, he held roles at institutions such as the Baltic Defence College and the EU Institute for Security Studies. He has provided expert testimony to several UK parliamentary committees, including Foreign Affairs and Defence.

James holds an MPhil in Contemporary European Studies from the University of Cambridge and a BSc Econ (Hons) in International Politics and Strategic Studies from the University of Wales, Aberystwyth.

He has appeared on Times Radio, Sky News, and LBC Radio, and written for publications including Times Red Box, The Spectator, Kyiv Independent, and CityAM. His analysis has also been cited in Newsweek.